

A once in a career opportunity as the best in professional development for health and physical educators comes to the Northwest!

Targeted, discipline specific professional development is crucial to the growth of all educators and is required in most states teacher evaluation or continued certification process. For health and physical educators this means the SHAPE America national convention which will be in Seattle for the first time in 40 years. With over 500 sessions specific to content area and grade level, no other professional development opportunity comes close to its value and it will only be here once during your professional life. The availability of clock hours and CEUs also make this a perfect source for keeping your certification current.

The hands on and face to face experience of a national conference provides a level of learning and understanding that cannot be duplicated by any online professional development. Health and physical educators will enhance their teaching abilities by learning from and with the best educators in the nation. There are half or full day session choices where you will leave with developed teaching skills not just a rough overview.

Health and physical education are a crucial part of the academic life of any school and many sessions will target this with practical and research based programs for Common Core, brain breaks, community health and fitness collaborations and a host of other topics that will involve all members of the learning community. At a SHAPE America National Convention there is no topic, issue, problem or challenge facing health and physical educators that will not be covered by multiple sessions. In addition, the exposition and vendor center provides the ability to stretch budgets through convention specials on the best equipment and curriculum materials available.

A SHAPE America National Convention in the northwest is almost as rare as Halley's Comet, you will not want to miss this professional development opportunity!
