

U.S. Department of Education

ALBERTO RETANA

Alberto Retana is Director of Community Outreach for the U.S. Department of Education where he is responsible for developing relationships, communicating with and generating support from community based organizations, civil rights, advocacy, faith based institutions, business leaders, parents and students on the Department's education initiatives, efforts, and programs.

Prior to joining the department, Mr. Retana was a community organizer for Community Coalition in South Los Angeles for eleven years. During this time, Alberto led several community driven campaigns that resulted in millions of dollars for South Los Angeles schools, a college preparatory curriculum for all students in Los Angeles Unified School District, and the creation of rigorous college and career academies.

As a leading expert in community organizing and racial justice, Alberto has participated in several studies and speaking engagements including, Changing the Rule of the Game: Youth Development and Structural Racism, Civic Enterprise's National Summit on America's Silent Epidemic, Community Organizing for Stronger Schools, and Policy Link's National Summit on Equitable Development, Social Justice and Smart Growth.

Alberto Retana is a graduate of the University of California, Los Angeles with a degree in political science.
